is, they take a Purse by the high-way, in Woods or Forrests, but these do it in the most frequented and Populous Cities.
This graue, Iuditiall, and Peremptory verdict and sentence, of that great Phylosopher, and renowned Physition, dooth more closely attach, and strongly arrest our ignorant Intruders, and bolde Periclitators in the Practise of Physicke, then all the world is aware of. This (I hope) shall euident-ly appeare vnto your L. by the two Treatises ensuing, the one of them, being written in Latin by a Learned German, and by me put into an English Coate, for the good of my Country-men: and the other, a short Obseruation of mine owne

ledge is double Ignorance, both because it is Ignorance, and because it lyeth, and counterfeiteth Skill and Science. For if it be a point and part of good wisdom, for a man to see and acknowledge his owne weaknesse and insufficiency, and therevpon, to keepe within Compasse, and meddle not (with the Shoe-maker) Ultra Crepidam: It must needs be an increase of Folly, Vanitie, and Arrogance, for any, to pretend Skill and knowledge in those Things wherein they are altogether vnacquainted, and to professe those Arts, which they neuer learned. But our Emperitkes and Impostors, as they are too ignorant either to Teach or Practise Physicke (which they neuer saluted from the threshhold) and too insolent, and arrogant to learne of the Maisters of that Facultie, or to be reduced into Order; so are they most dangerous and pernicious vnto the Weale publike. Among wild Beasts (saith one) Enuy is most Sauadge & exitiall, and among tamed Beasts Flattery. The reason is, because the Sycophant is least of all feared, and most difficultly discerned and discovered. These Crocodils, disguised with the vizard of fained Knowledge, and masking vnder the specious Titles of Physitions, and Doctors, not attained in Schooles, but imposed by the Common people, do with their Absolonicall Salutations steale away the affections of the inconstant Multitude, from the Learned Professors of that Facultie, and with their loablike Imbracings, stabbe to the hart their poore and silly Patients, ere they be aware, or once suspect such vncouth Trechery. The more worthy & excellent the Obiect of any Art is, the greater, and more dangerous is the Error of the Artist, if he faile in his Office. If a Taylor marre a Garment, or the Potter breake the Vessell he should make, the matter is not great. But as he said in the Comickall Poet, Grave est Periculū in Filio: So great is the Hazard, and greater is the Fault committed in the Bodie of Man, the Domicil and Palace of the immortall Soule, and (as Zoroaster telleth it) audacia Nati.

DEDICATION.

per a stupendum Miraculum. I omit as small matters, their liuing vpon the Spoile, and deceiuing the People of their mo-ny and substance (which yet the good Magistrate doth vndoubtedly respect) but their hainous offences against the pretious Health and Life of Men, (whereof London hath many wofull Experiments in a yeare) are altogether intolle-rable, and in no wise to be silenced or pretermitted. Neuer-thelesse it is straunge to behold, and consider, how these circumforanian Impostors are dignified by the People, flocked and resorted vnto in whole Troupes, sought out far & neare, and equalized with, nay (which is the greatest Indigniti-tie of all other) preferred & extolled before the most Grac-Learned, and best Experienced in that Profession. If a man haue scruple in Conscience, hee will not repaire vnto an Hodge-priest (as they are called) or bare Reader, hauing no more Diuinitie the a Child often yeares old, for resolution, but to some Learned, godly and Iudiciall Diuine. If a Suit in Lawe, he will not resort to a Husbandman or Artificer, for Counsell and Direction, but to a Skillfull, well studyed, and approoued Lawyer. And yet (such is the extreme folly and madnesse of many Men), that in case of Health and Life, (Things most pretious) they think every Tinker, Bankrupt, or wandering Fugitiue, who hath ouerrunne his Creditors, forsaken his Trade, and seeketh to liue (like a Droane without any Calling) a sufficient and compleat Physitian, to aduise, counsell, and direct them. It will be said, that these Good-fellowes haue bene obserued, to performe some Cures, and to haue good successe in their Actions. It hath bene likewise knowne, that a common Mariner, the Maister and Gouvernor of the ship dying, or miscarrying by some Accident, hath safely brought the Barke to shore, and arriued at the wished Hauen: and yet no man (if hee may chuse) will willingly sayde with such a Pilot. A Company of vntained and lawe Soul-diers, which hee had sawe fight on Warre before, haue vanquished, shed, and put to flight a Band of Veterans, invred for many yeares, and well exercised in martiall Affaires. And yet no Commander will prefer the punee, and fresh-water Souldier before the ancient, tryed, and well-disciplined Warriour. Vna hirundo non facit Ver, Though that bee admitted (which notwithstanding if the Instances be well scanned) will be a difficult matter to proue) yet I hold firmly (with incomparable Galen) my former Position, that they are bad and dangerous Members of the State, and in no sort sufferable in any well-ordered Common-wealth. I do therefore presume to offer these my slender traavailes vnto your L. who as you are a zealous Louer of your Country, a for-ward Professor of the Gospell, an incorrupt, and vpright Iusticer, a Friend to Vertue and Men of Desert, a professed Aduersary to all Ma-lefactors: So I nothing doubt, but you will take vpon you the Patronage, of the Learned and honest Physicion, against the Ignorant and Couzening Mounte-banke. Among your other manifolde, and Honourable seruices, performed to your Prince, and County, (wherby you haue commended your Name and Memorie to all Posteritie), it is not the last nor least, that by your watchfull Prouidence, and healthfull Institute you haue cut off great numbers of Grassators, and Robbers; and in a maner, clenched, scouted and gid the Realme, of those Monsters, and sauadge ravenous Beasts in the shape of Men. And I am perswaded, that your Ho. Endeouours in furthering and contemning the catching and suppressing of these tame Beasts, or rather wily Foxes and Panthers, who with their subtile sleights, sugred words, and sweet sentes, do allure, contrap, and circūuent the Simple, and pray vpo both their Goods and Bodies at their pleasure, will be no lesse acceptable to God, profitable to your Country, gratefull and commendable vnto all succeeding Ages, then the former.

 But I need not spend words in perswading your L. who haue already declared, your Honourable Inclination, and forwardnesse vnto that Businesse. Therefore fearing to be tedious, I desire only the continuance of your Honourable fauour vnto the Societie whereof I am, in their iust and honest Causes, & Affaires, and wish vnto your L. from my most inward affections, increase of Honor, Length of Dayes, prosperous successe in all your Honourable Enterprises for Gods Church, and your Countries Good, Health of Body, Tranquillitie of mind, compleat Fælicitie in this world, and Eternall Happinesse in that, which is to come.

THE ANATOMYES

of the True Physition, and of them, are graphically described, and set Antithesis. 1. Part. 1.

Whoever purposeth to attaine the right noble, and diuine Science of Physicke, and to become a true, and worthie Asclepiadean: before all things, it is requisite, that he be wholly carryed, and as it were rauished, with a naturall & heroicall instinct and inclination vnto that Studie.

For it is not possible for any man, vntlesse he be cast in Natures mould, and by her fashioned for that Profession, to performe any thing therein, worth a Rush.

But he that is therevnto framed, and disposed by Natures indowment, doth not only in a short time, make happie proceedings in the knowledge of that high and learned Facultie, but doth likewise, wittily and discretely, apply himselfe vnto the preceptions, acting, and performing in the view of the world, some famous Worke, of great applause, and admiration.

Especially if he be of an ingenuous, and Schollerlike Disposition, willing and readie to receiue Instruction and Profit, by whom fos-

For this is the very store-house of Erudition, the most necessary and precious Jewell of life, the Treasure, and Light of Science.

Who before hee set vpon, so long and laborious a Studie, beside honestie of life, and civilitie of manners, is polished and adorned with Pallas golden chaine: I meane thoroughly furnished, with those Arts and Tongues, which are most requisite and necessary in a Physition.

For these are the well-springs and Fountaines of all humane,

Anatomies of the true Physician, wherewith if our Physicion be not thoroughly watered, he can neuer bring forth any good or wholesome Fruite. For as these liberall and generall Arts leade vs (as it were by the hand) to the sweete and siluer streames of Naturall Philosophie: so Philosophie bringeth vs (after some good acquaintance with her) to the spacious, goodly, & beautifull Field of Physicke.

It is needfull likewise, that hee bring with him an eager appetite, and insatiable Desire, to penetrate, and diue into the Mysteries of that profound Science: wherein there are so many hidden secrets, faire removed from the Eyes & Sence of the Vulgar sort.

Wherevpon, that hee may the more easily and happily attaine the knowledge of these things, he placeth himselfe in some famous Vniuersitie, replenished by the benigne aspect of Heaven, & clemency of the Aire & Soyle, with refined and braue Wits: where (as in a Mart of Physicke) he doth not only store himselfe with varietie of medicinal furniture of all kinds, but doth likewise often enter into the lists with his Cotrainers, & exerciseth himselfe in discussing the difficult Controuersies, of that learned Facultie chusing for his Masters & Standard-bearers, such as are of greatest learning, and most renowned & happy Practise, and such as do teach the Art painfully and faithfully, that by these meanes he may more ioyfully and speedily aspire vnto the top of his Desires.

Neither is he wanting to himselfe, but duly waying that Occasion is swift, slippery, and bald behind, he catcheth her by her fore-lockes: with daily and singular diligence he striketh the Iron, while it is hote, and taketh the Time whilest Time serueth.

By this meanes, he layeth a bound and sure foundation of his Art, readily apprehending, firmly retaining the precepts thereof, and prudently applying them to the vse of his Patients.

Moreover, he seriously bethinketh himselfe, that this diuine, and most learned Study, requireth not a lazie, drowzie, and slothful-snooring Thersias: but a painfull, vigilant, and industrious Hygiea, having a chearfull and vndanted Mind, against all dangers, and troubles whatsoever.

Hencevpon he daily & painfully exerciseth himselfe in reading the learned volumes of those auncient Worthies, who haue faithfully, and fruitfully deliuered this Art vnto Posterity, the only Solace of humane Life: he diligently frequenteth the publike Lectures of Anatomy, and afterward himselfe doth make open Dissection. To conclude, he spareth no paine, but climbeth the high & steep Mountains, rangeth thorow thorow the low vallies, pierceth the woods and thickets, entereth the Caves and hollow Dens of the earth, searcheth thorowly the spacious and wild fields, the banks of sweet & running Rivers, to attain the true knowledge and nature of multiforme Simples.

And that hee may comprehend and vnderstand the nature, properties, and vertues of all these, he refuseth no trauaile, nor forbeareth any cost, referring and applying them all, to the commoditie, benefit, and health of Men.

In the meane while (like a Diogenes or Timon, who desires to be alone and singular) he doth not refuse to ioyne with learned Physicians, when they visit their Patients, and conferre together about the curatio of Diseases: but doth heedfully obserue those learned Colloquies, and Consultations, and carefully commit them to memory: putting likewise his owne hand by little and little vnto the worke, and in Cases of difficultie and danger, is nothing ashamed to follow the Aduise and Direction of skilfull and well-practised Physicians.

But to archiue all these things happily, and successively, sufficient Time and Opportunitie are necessarily required.

For the learned, ample and diuine Art of Physicke, which requireth a whole man, is not learned in the space of one or two yeares: but for the largenesse, excellency, worthinesse, and profunditie thereof, the whole Life of man is hardly sufficient.

If we expect that this heavenly Science implanted in the mind, and purchased by so many sweats, and more then Herculean Labors, should yeeld a plentifull harvest to the good, & welfare of Mankind.

Thus you haue briefly (as it were) the birth, education, & institutio of a true Asculapian: to whom if you oppose your Changeling and masking Mounte banke, you shall finde them to agree like Harpe and Harrow.

For it is clearer then the Sun, that the whole Rable of these Quack-saluers, are of a base wit, & peruerse Nature, hauing no more naturall Inclination, or Dispositio vnto this study, then the Ass to the harpe.

For all these Bragadocian Thessali, which boast of their skil in this Profession, covering their Asses eares, with the honest tytles of Doctors & Physicians, as with a comely Mantel, and practising Physick to the vnauydable and lamentable hurt and danger, of their poore and miserable Patients, if you consider them aright, for the most part are the abiect & sordidous scumme, and refuse of the people, who hauing runne away from their Trades and Occupations, learne in a corner, to get their liuings, by killing of Men.

And if we plucke off the vizards wherein these disguised Maskers do march, & bring the to the Light which (like Owles) they cannot abide, they will appeare to be runnagate Iewes, the cut-throats and robbers of Christians, slowbellyed Monkes, who haue made escape from their Cloysters, Simoniacks, and periured shauelings, basie Sir Iohn lacklaires, Thraconical, and vnlettered Chymists, shifting & outcast Petrifoggers, light-headed, and triuiall Druggers, and Apothecaries, Sun-shunning night birds, and Corner creepers, dull-pated, and base Mechanicks, Stage-players, Iuglers, Pedlers, prittle-pratling Barbers, filthie Grasiers, curious Bath-keepers, common shifters, & cogging Cauteliers, bragging Soldiers, Bankrupt marchants, lazy Clowns, one-eyed or lamed Fencers, toothlesse and ratling old wiues, chattering Char-women, and Nurs-keepers, long tongued Midwiues, scape-Taborers, Dog-leeches, and such like baggage, and earth dung.

In the next Ranke, to second this goodly and sweet Troupe, follow Poysoners, Inchanters, Soothsayers, Wizards, Fortune-tellers, Magicians, Witches, Hags, with a rablement moe, of that damnable Crew, the very filth and drosse of the world.

Now, if you take a good view of these sweet Companions, you shall finde them, not only meere Dolts, Idiots, and Buzzards: but likewise Conueners and Haters of all good learning.

For the greatest part of them disdain booke-learning, being altogether vnacquainted with liberal Arts, and neuer came where Learning grew.

For euery one of them, though in his own opinion an other Chibron, yet either hath no bookes at all, or if hee haue a great Library, to make the world beleene hee is a great Clarke, yet hee layeth them by the walles to feed the Moother, but neuer peruseth them: nay many times cannot, so grosse is his Ignorance.

For Bookes (witness Galen, the incomparable Maister of Physicke) are Monuments, and Registers, of those who are before learned; and no perfect Instruction for Radsbies, and Idiots.

Neither doth the possession of a great Library, and multitude of Bookes, make a man learned: no more then Aias armor would make Thisbe a stout Souldier: But the painful and diligent reading them, and applying them to vse: as the skilfull vse of weapons, not the wearing of them sheweth and proueth a good Warriour.

But these (for the most part) rush into Apolloes Temple, with vnwashen handes, and vnlettered heades: and as they are as blinde as Beetles, so they haue not so much as a desire to see into the myste-

those of that abstruse Facultie: they either vse no Teachers at all, or else make choice of some Theſſalicall Empericks as learned as themselves, or some smoaky Chymist, or black Vulcan, able to teach them nothing but that which must afterward be vntaught: yet notwithstanding they, (well like the Terentian Thraso, with a vaine and phoppish conceit of skill and knowledge, as though they were the onely profound Doctors, and learned Philosophers of the world. To conclude, they are such as cannot abide to take any paines or trauell in studie: they reiect incomparable *Galen*s learned Commentaries, as tedious and friuolous Discourses, hauing found thorow Paracelsus Vulcanian shop, a more compendious and short way to the Wood: spending Time, the most noble and precious creature of God, either with doing nothing, or vainly and foolishly, about toyes, as in finding the Philosophers Stone, making Potable gold, or in doing that which is euill and pernicious, as in making some pleasant & refined poysons, vnder the names of Turbith mineralls, or Butyrum Arsenici, to keepe Charon from wanting worke; or else with a troubled and shittle head, tossed too and fro like a feather, and turning as oft as the weather-cock, they neuer bring any thing to good effect, or perfection.

Others are so notoriously sottish, that being ouer head and eares in the myrie puddle of grosse Ignorance, yet they will by no meanes see or acknowledge it: so that they know not so much, as that they know nothing.

For to giue an instance in the most absolute, exquisite, and diuine frame of mans Body, if they can shewe a rude Description thereof, hanging in their chamber, and nick-name two or three parts (so as it would make a horse to breake his halter to heare them) they think themselves iolly fellowes, and are esteemed great Anatomists in the eyes of the Vulgars.

Now in the knowledge of Plants they are old excellent, and will roundly shewe you Spynach in stead of Sorrell, a Nettle for Betony, and Colchicu for Saffron, & that very demurely without any blushing.

Others (as wise as these) affirme very confidently, if not impudently, that the knowledge of Plants and other simples, appertaineth not vnto them, but to the Apothecaries.

But it seemeth to me very ridiculous, if not altogether dishonorable, and ignominious, that he who taketh vpon him to be an other Apollon and great Doctor, should not know the Instruments of his owne Art.

Now they are not so ignorant & doltish, but they are as enuious, impudent,

The Anatomies of the true Phisition, impudent, and waincoat-faced. And since there is no punishment allotted vnto Ignorance in the weale publike, sauing the blot and brand of Infamy, that is so familiar and accustomed vnto them from the cradle, that it toucheth them no more then a flea-biting. And Impudencie is so rooted in the bones, and bred in the flesh, that they not onely in secret lash and whip with their venomous and serpentine Tongues, all honest and learned Phisitions, but at their pleasures do tyrannise and excarnificat mens bodies, and through their bayardlike boldnesse, and licentious impunitie, make hauocke of their silly Patients, making experiments, and trying their Tartareall conclusions, by more then Tragicall Deaths.

For there is no crime so haynous or odious, which lewd and lost Companions do not perpetrate, vnlesse they be bridled and restrained by feare of punishment: but if the Magistrate looke thorow the fingers, and winke at their naughtinesse, or else maintaine and patrocinate them therein, then they carrie all away smoothly, and sleep soundly on both sides.

But these men should doo farre better, neuer to vndertake those things wherein they haue no skill, then to professe those Arts which they neuer learned.

Now it is the honestest and safest course for good and learned Phisitions, (since they haue no power in their hand to redresse these Enormities, and that there is small hope of a better world) to haue no societie with these Barbarians, enemies to all Antiquitie, Humanitie, and good learning, least they heare the old saying, Like will to like. As was said of the Diuell dauncing with the Collicke.

Antithesis. 2.

Part.

IF we from hence proceed to the Course of life, and practise of a right Esculapian, wee shall see him differ as much as white and blacke, from the croaking, and hedge-creeeping Quack-saluer.

His maine and principall drift and endeuour, by meanes of his education in those studies, which wholly rauish the mind with the loue of Vertue, is, that as a faithfull friend, and well-willer of Nature he may religiously, vnspottedly, & charily preserue the precious healt an

and the counterfeit.

and life of man, and conferre the Estimation & Dignitie of that most honorable and worthy Profession.

For he thorowly wayeth and considereth the excellencie of his Art subiect, Man, that noble, admirable, and incomparable worke of Iehouah, the Temple of the holy Ghost, the most eminent and cleare Myrrour, & Spectacle among all creatures, of the diuine wisdom, Iustice, Goodnesse, I say Man framed after the similitude of the Eternall.

Which noble and worthy Creature, committeth his dearest Selfe and Life into the hands and trust of our Physition.

Concerning whom, together with all his Operations, & Practises in his Facultie, he is to giue account vnto Nature and the Author thereof: the Eternall as a carefull Inspector, & sincere Iudge of them, in the day of that great & general Assise, & euerlasting Sabaoth of the world.

When hee seriously and diligently pondereth these things, hee must needs remember his owne Condition, and that it concernes him to looke well to the vpshot and Conclusion.

Herevpon he attempteth nothing, he appointeth and determineth nothing, but with sound Aduice, Councel, & Iudgemēt, searching out with great care, industrie, and diligence, the nature and force of present Maladies (weighing all things in the ballances of Reason) with great and singular Dexterity repelling them, and with admirable wisdom, foretelling and presaging future Calamities.

He accounteth nothing more deare vnto him, then the Health of his Patients, wherevnto he is wholly deuoted, refusing no labour or danger, be it neuer so imminent, to attaine that end. Nay he cōsumeth himselfe with griefe and care for other mens Calamities, reckoning their woes, his owne miseries: and all to this end, that hee may performe the office of a true Physition, and deliuer his Patients from vnmoydable Perils, and rescue men as it were out of the iawes of Death.

For Physicke being the Art of helping and healing, not of killing and excarnificating, (as Scribonius saith well) the Professor thereof, our Physition, dooth not value men by their Fortunes, and Places in the world, but reacheth out his helping and healthfull Hand vnto all that desire his assistance, and maketh sure neuer to hurt any, but helpe as many as possibly he can.

Herevpon, as becometh a good and vertuous Man, hee carrieth not two faces ynder one Hood, but his Heart and Tongue, his words and actions agree and goe hand in hand together.

For

The Anatomie of the true Physitian,

For he endeavoreth by all meanes to shew himselfe prudent, bishfull, trustie, graue, modest, constant, couragious, courteous, and absable.

For all these faire Vertues do vsually attend them, who have bene rightly conuersant, and trained vp in Apolloes Schoole.

Among other Vertues hee greatly embraceth Taciturnitie, and Secrecie. For there are many Misteries of the Art, many Diseases of Patients, which to blab abroad, were neither seemly nor expedient.
Many things are said and done by these like parties, many Accidents fall out in their houses, which are to be concealed as Secrets, and not to be carried out of doores, and cryed at the Crosse.

For it is a Signe and argument of a Gentleman-like Disposition, and amiable Discretion, to keepe close things to be secreted, least all our Wit seeme to lie in our tongues end, and not to be lodged in the Head or Heart.

And as he is secret and discreet, so is he likewise Sober and Temperate, that he may be fit & readie to visite his Patients, at any houre of the day or night: being as good an afternoones-man, as a morning-man.

For as Galen witnesseth, a good Physitian ought to bee as studious of Sobrietic, as of Veritie.

So in his attire there is no superfluous Curiositie, Courtlike Pomp, far-fetched & foolish Finicallitie: no nor Diogenicall nastinesse, and Lazerlike slouenie: but therein he laboureth to be decent, comely, and frugal.

Moreover he is contented with a mediocritie, and ioyeth in a meane Estate, not greedily gaping and breathing after Riches, being sufficient to himselfe, and knowing that they of their owne accord, follow an industrious and laborious Hand, vnlesse a Mans lot fall among such as are altogether Clownes and Sowers.

And that he may auoyd all sinister Cogitations, and Suspitions of guill, and vn honest dealing, he cautelously shunneth and shurreth out all churlish, malignant, new-found, & suspected medicines, admitting those onely in his Practise, which are easie, safe, benigne, vndoubted, secure, and approued by long Vse, and certaine Experience of the ancient Worthies, and great Masters in Physicke.

And in all these things hee carrieth himselfe discreetly, ingenuously, & without Cunning and Deceit: not refusing to submit his Pre-scripts and Formes (if need require) to the Censure and Iudgement of learned Physitions, willingly yielding to conferre with them, and to the great Hippocrates words) embracing willingly any learned Colloquie, least by any meanes he should seeme to play the Coward or Flincher.

For Truth being of that Nature, that she neuer hideth her Face, or feareth to behold the Light, so the true Philosophet or Phisitian, (for those two in our Age make one) is sociable, & readie to communicate, hearing other mens Opinions and Iudgement with great delight, only to this intent, that by this friendly Conference, and diligent Inuestigation, he may be confirmed and incouraged in his good Course, and the Patient receiue more assured, and certaine Benefites.

2. Antithesis.

2. Part.

Now if you compare with him, our suborned and masking Mounte. banke, whose wits are as dull as a doore nale, they will be found as farre different and distant, as Michaels Mount, and Cheneu Halls.

For where shal you finde any one in this Crew, who hath any spark of Religion, or drop of Charity? where one that hath any right sence of Compassion, or common Humanitie? But to speake plaine, (though it be horrible, so much as to thinke) the greatest part of this Packe, are no better then ranke and arrant Atheists.

And to speake within compasse, you shal sooner finde a blacke Swan, then an honest man in this Bunch: but if you pry narrowly into them, you shal discerne notorious Impostores, olde beaten Foxes, and Cozeners; not Friends and Favorites, but sworne Enemies to Nature, and Man-kinde: laughing in their sleeues at their Budget full of wyles which they carrie in their bosome, most basely and wickedly, prostituting both Themselues, and the Art.

For this lost Companion, hauing a Foxes Head, and an whorish and wainscotted Face, considering that nothing is set by in this Age, but that which is profitable, that wealth is more esteemed then Honesty, and that Riches make the Gentleman, and that Money maketh Vertue stand behinde the doore, he setteth this downe as a Maxime, and Conclusion, that wealth must be had, though with the Inurie and wracke of Pietie, Equitie, Humanitie, and common Honesty, & therefore foreprising Man, that immortal, and excellent Creature, the grand Myracle of the Eternall, at naught, hee carrieth himselfe Impiously, Desperately, and Craftily, in all his Courses, calling as it were the Dice upon his Patients.

Hereupon he pronounceth all Things darkly and doubtfully, as if Apollo should give Oracles from his Threefooted stoole. And if he happen at any Time on a Truth, you must pardon him, it was more then he was aware of. Now, all is Cocke sure, hee will pawne his Life and Credit (not both worth a Rush) all shall bee well. By and by, with a Scoicall Countenance, he threatneth Daunger and Death: breathing at once both cold and hotte, and all to this End: that which way so euer the World waggeth, hee may bee thought by his great Wisedome, and deepe reach in Diuining, to haue foreseene and presaged the Euent: which he foreknew as much as a Woodcocke.

So that Being himselfe more variable then the Polyp, hee is in twentie seuerall Mindes in an houre, turning and winding, too and fro, like a Tragedians Buskin, and vitering quite Contraries.

Thus doth this base and lewd Couzener mocke God, and despise Man, for whose cause the Eternall created the goodly and beautifull Frame of the World: and in whose Bodie, whatsoever is more largely in that Spacious, and Gorgious Pallace, and Theater delineated, is more briefly comprised, and as it were Epitomised, and represented a short Summe or Viewe. Against this Noble Creature, the small Counterfeit of the Great G.O.D. hee dooth oft times rage more sauely, then any wilde Bear, or Tygar, refusing all good, safe, and wholsome Medicines, and purposely making Choise of them which were invented by Sathan or his Imps, for the ruine, and Destruction of Mankind.

Now, his Manners and Conditions (the truly Characters of the Minde) wherein there is no one graine of Honesty, declare plainly what a sweet Companion this is. For if a man consider his Person, he shall finde him Lewd, Shamelesse, a Hater mortall of all Good Men, well seene and practised in all Couzening, Legerdemaine, Coney-catching, and all other cunning Shifts, &c Steighes, a cracking Boaster, Proud, Insolent, a secret Back-biter, a contentious Wrangler, a common Iester, a Lyar, a Buse-body, a Runnagate Wanderer, a Cogging Sycophant, and Trencher-Chaplain, a covetous Exactor, and Wringer of his Patients: in a word, a Man, or rather Monster, made of a Mixture of all Vices. For having spent all his Tyme in learning these Feates, and long Custome having bred an Habit or second Nature, it cannot bee but that in Vertues Place there succeedeth a whole Troupe, and as it were a hottomelesse Whirlepoole of all Vice, and odious Naughtiness, and Filthinesse.

Herevpon hee neither Fearing God, nor Caring for the good Lawes of Man, (I am ashamed to speake that, which they shaine not to comend) refuseth nor to giue Horrible and Dereftable Counsell, for the murthering of Boore Infants in their mothers bellies, procuring them to fall from the Tree, like vauumely Fruite. And being as lasciuious as a Sparrow in the Spring, hee maketh no bones to corrupt and sollicit to vock and esse, young beautifull Maidens (hauling a speciall Freulie, in Curing the Greene Sicknesse) yea, and comely Matrons and Wiues, if he may handsomely come into their Chambers: blushing no whit to spend many houres in Carowling in Tavernes, and dallyance among Curtezans.

And according to the diuers Dispositions and Humours of Men, that hee may fit and Please all, he layeth aside the Behauiour and Grauitie of a Physician, and putteth vpon Him the Person of a Syco-phane, and Parasite, making account as the World goeth, to thrive better thereby, then by his profession, refusing to be in Seruitude, or Drudgery, how base so euer that hee may creepe in to fauour with his Good Masters, and Mistresses, and get into that Great Lord, or Rich Ladies Booke. One while hee playeth the Apothecarie, an other while the Cooke, an other while the Seruing Man: other whiles serueth in stead of Mother Midnight, and sometime hee is content to carrie the Rols, upon abasing Himselfe to euery Seruite and Slauiish Office. Nay by your leave, Sometimes (which is of all other most vnworthy, and vnbecoming) hee playeth the Foole and Iester, and now and then (which is worst of all) the Bawd and Pandore.

And he is so farre from being thought worse for all this, by the Vulgar, that he is counted an Obsequious, Officious, Neat & Necessary Man, a Merry and good Fellow, and the Onely Physician.

Among other things hee laboureth to excell in Garrulitie, and much Babling, his Tongue being like a Lambs Tale, or Aspen leafe, which neuerlyeth still, but is alwayes wagging. And since he cannot come to be expert in sound Learning, Iudgement, and Skill in his Art, he will be sure to goe farre beyond them in Childish, Foolish, Vnseasonable, Tedious, and Tiersome Loquacitie. So that by a vaine and

The Anatomie of the true Physicion, fond boasting of Learning, and impudent promising, and vndertaking many and great Matters, he is accounted a great and profound Doctor among the rude and ignorant Multitude, especially among simple & credulous Women, (who through their weaknesse of Iudge-ment, shallownesse of Conceit, and Leuitie of Minde, are of all other most readie to embrace old wines Tales, Lyes, and Forgeries) he keepeth a foule Coyle, playing the Champion, and Warriour with his Tongue, vaunting about measure of his great and noble Acts, in killing I know not how many Chymeras; despising, & that with a Grace, all the Learned Physitions of the Place, and sometimes Age wherein he liueth, berking and byting, reuiling, and calumniating them, at his Pleasure, as not worthy to carry his Bookes, or once to be named, or compared with his sweete Selfe, our great Magnifico, and all to the end that he might alienate Mens Minds from Them, & by his shame-lesse Canils and Slaunders, impair their Reputation, and brand them with the blacke Coale of Infamy and Reprach.

Now if by these cunning sleights, vsfauourie Prating, secret Calumniation, he haue scraped together a few Crownes, that he may trauail into some forraine Countrey, hee will make sure to fawne vpon the Female kinde, and to purchase the Fauour of honourable Ladies and Dianas, with some rare, and pretious Gifts, suppose a peece of Counterfeit Vnicornes horne, or a Bezoar-stone, made of Powder of Post, or glassie Sand, the Onely, and Soueraigne Antidote, and Medicine, (if you will belecue my great Maister) of all Maladie, Treacle, Diatellaron, or some Counterfeit Drugge closed hard with the Venetian Seale, or a litle white Clay: which hee calleth Terra Lemnia, or some such like pretious Iewel, not worth a button.

Now he impudently, with a whole streame of prittie prattle, setteth out to the vndermost his goodly Gifts, that they are worth twise their waight in Gold: that they must be laid vp in their Caskets, amog their most costly Ornaments, and kept as their Life.

Thus with these cunning sleights, fawnings, and flattering words, and Gifts not worth a strawe, (which notwithstanding silly Women haue not the wit to reiect, but take them with both hands, and locke them vp for Treasures, extolling and praising them to the Skyes among their Gossips) he winneth the Spurres among the Multitude: and being in high Admiration, Credit, and renowne with my Gossip Prittle Prattle, his Fame is by & by spread through the whole Town, as with Bell and Clapper, and hee reckoned the onely Learned and profound Doctor.

For he cannot possibly make so loud and impudent a Lye, but in straight way runneth for currant, among these credulous and poore Soules. For among Blinde, the Blinker easily ruleth the Rost.

So that by his lewd and lowd Lyes, and other pretie Shifts, and nimble Sleights, he bringeth to passe, that hee is applauded in euery Corner, and magnified by the common sort, as an other Apollo.

For they delighting altogether in Noueltie, and loathing their old accustomed Physitions, though neuer so learned, if there come any straunge Beast, or Monster, out of Barbary, or lacke an Apes from Cataia, they doo gaze vpon him with Admiration, flocke after him by whole Troupes, and set him out, in highest Degrees of Commendations.

And being compassed with this Crew of Idiots, and sitting in his Chaire of State with his Cap of Maintenance, by his silly Patient, it is a world to heare how his Tongue rowleth and walketh at randome, (but not one wise word, or any way appertaining to the matter, if he might gaine thereby a Kingdome.) One while with magnificall, bombasted, and ell-long words, he boasteth of his straunge and admirable Cures, (you may take time to beleue them) an other while, he telleth endlesse, long, and headlesse Stories, of his rare, and hard Adventures, in Trauailes and Perigrinations, vttering oft times, and that with great arrogancie, and shamelesse Impudencie, as many Lyes, as words. Other while he taketh vp the Person of a leaster, and playeth the Foole in the Play very singularly. For that Part of all other (as it pleaseth himselfe and his fond Faubourites the best) so it becommeth him right well.

But he hath one propertie, which by the way is worthy of speciall Commendation. If he see or heare any Thing in the House of his Patient, it were as good to haue bene cryed at the Crosse. He cannot abide to keepe Counsell.

For it is not possible that a Man of many words, should haue any Truth or Secrecie in him.

And as he is a Babler, so is he likewise a good Trencher man, or Good fellow as they call them, louing company and good cheare passing well, and the Chesse, the Dice, a Cup of neat Wine, better a great deale then his Booke.

For if you misme him at any Tyme, you may be sure to finde him either in the Tauerne, or at Bowles, or at some Feast or Meeting of Good fellowes.

For our Smell-feast, will be sure to haunt the Houses and Tables Anatomie of the true Physician, of Rich and great Men; partly to fill his Paunch; and partly that he may be thought to know all fashions, and that hauing wonne the fa-uour of Grosse-headed and credulous Rich Capen-caters, hee may by their meanes be preferred and aduanced.

And though he make glorious & vaunting Pollicitations of binding Beares, and moouing Mountainer, yet if trusting to his big and Buggewords, vpon some vrgent necessitie you desire his Counsell in some sodaine Symptom and headlong Disease, by and by you shall finde him falter at the first onsets, as a Man beside his wit, and not knowing which way to turne himselfe, or at what End to begin.

Then notable any longer to couer his Ignorance, he getteth him a Corner to peruse his Note-booke, which he hath patched from some Apothecaries File, or else some English Pamphlet of Surgery, which he yet vnderstandes not without an Interpreter, or else he flieth to those old Surbines, and Tudge-blew-coats Antimony and Mercury Precipitate, and if these good-fellowes chance to faile him, then wanting all sound Learning and Iudgement, it is a Good sport to see how hee fumbleth and confoundeth himselfe, running into twentie Errors, and Abusidities, euery one greater then another.

So that by this meanes the Disease doth oftentimes sooner dispatch the Patient, then our Pretie and Gay Doctore can resolue of a Course to be taken.

But that nothing may be wanting to our barred Cumanyst, hee laboureth in his Gate, Gesture, and Attire, to resemble the right Es- colation but so that he is like an Ape clad in Purple, with a whole rable of Foyes and Trinkets, that by Garish, Outlandish, and vncouth Ap-parell, his gaine Gold-chaine, and glistening Rings vpon euery Finger, he may draw to him the Concourse, and Admiration of the People, and more readily vter his Cart-load of Leasings.

Now as this Stage like Brauery requireth no small cost: so doeth it greatly further our Magnifico in many Pretie and Cunning Shifts and Tricks of Gaining.

Among other Beats, if any of them is more Crafte, or hath a litle more broken Latine in his Budget, then the Common Sort, hee pyeth into the Practise of other Physicians, and lyeth about diliget-ly for those Medicines, which he hath heard or knowe to do good, and hauing once gotten a Transcript of them, hee weth them hand ouer head, without Reason.

Which notwithstanding if wee give credite to Hippocrates and Galen we shall see that the most famous Physicians of the world were not without Reason.

And the counterfeits. 77 unless they passe through the Hand of Skillfull and Iudicious Physicians, do more hurt then Good. That which is one Mans Blisse, is another Mans Bane.

The greater Part of these Study, and that seriously, the Art of Sophistry, Confeiming, and plaine Cony-catching, aduancing, and setting to sale with Great applause and Concourse, their witlesse Nostrums, which they haue patched together by the marring of two or three good Medicines, to make a third worst of all, feeding the Common People with Toyes, Trifles, Bables, Nutshells, plaine Chaffe instead of Wheate, which notwithstanding they set out, to the utmost, with more then Hyperbolicall, or rather Paracelsicall Commendations.

Thus they inelcate and circumuent poore silly Soules, leaving them as much money in their Purses, as they haue Wit in theyr Heads; especially if they prepare theyr Medicines themselves, at home in theyr Salles, and hyre two or three Brokers, to blaze theyr Commendations in euery Corner of the Citie.

And if they can perswade them (according to the foolish opinion of Many) that nothing is wholesome, effectuell and Soueraigne, but that which is far fetcht and deare bought (for they fill the Purse) they haue halfe wonne the Goale. For all ordinary and common Gifts of Nature, are despised and set at naught by these Braue Magnificos, which haue nothing but Vnicornes horne, Bezoar stone, Magistery of Pearles, and I knowe not what Precious, and Forreine Bugges and Drugges in theyr Mouthes.

These our Mons-banks proclaimeth lylke a Daw vpon a Perke, to be infallible and sure Cardes, approoued and ratified by long and good Experience, laying oft times his Head to pawne, that they are such as whereof common and triuiall Galenicall Doctors (for with that Style hee brandeth all learned Physicians) are altogether Ignorant.

Whereupon, that hee may by all meanes auoyd to treade in the steppes of the auncient and moderne Worthies, this blinde, and foolish Impostor, carefully shunneth all benigne, safe, well-experienced, Iudiciall, and Rationall Medicines, and maketh choyse, of Churlish, Violent, Vncouth Drugges, inuented not to Purge, but to torment and excarnificat: not to saue, but to Kill Men, couering theyr strong Poyson, in a small Dose, giuing them sometimes in Bozenges, sometime in Wine, that the poore Patient, looking vpon the fayre and pleasant Bayte, may not deserye this the Hooke and Poyson lurking within: and all this he doth with great Boldnesse and Impudencie, not knowing the Daunger and Perill ensuing.

For they beeing (by all Classicall and Rationall Phisitions) ranged in the Ranke of Poysons, do therefore violate Nature, not onely by their Quantitie, but likewise by their Qualitie, be their Dose neuer so small.

Others as blinde and bold Bayards as the former, bring out of their Budgets, and disperse abroad as Soueraigne Salues, certaine Powders, Alcola, Vnguents, Cerats, Oyles, not worth a rotten threed, not knowing whereof they are compounded, and oft times being not able to Name them aright.

Other, vnder the Names and Tytles of Elixir of Lyfe, Quin-Essence of Gold, Pearle, Azoth, and Panacea, which they themselves haue made, and account Secrets of Secrets (whereby they haue fetched backe I know not how many Soules embarked alreadie in Charons boate) do sell certaine Gimmalls, with great applause, and for graet summes of money, and by their Factors disperse them abroad into forraigne Countries.

Others, that they may colourably and cunningly hide their grosse Ignorance, when they know not the Cause of the Disease, referre it vnto Charmes, Wichcrafts, Magnificall Incantations, and Sorcerie, vainely, and with a brazen forehead, affirming that there is no way to help them, but by Characters, Circles, Figure-castings, Exercismes, Coniurations, and other Impious, and Godlesse Meanes.

Other set to sale at a great price, certaine Amulets of Gold and Silver, stamped vnder an appropriate and selected Constellation of the Planets, with some Magickall Character, Shamelesly boasting that they will cure all Diseases, and worke I know not what other wonders.

O gratefull and delightfull Comedie vnto the Diuell, whereat he is ready to trust Himself with loud Laughter, to see how he leadeth by the Nose the Common people, with these Iugling Illusions, and Sophistications, and thereby greatly amplifieth and enlargeth his Kingdome.

Others swelling with a big conceit, and vaine ostentation, of skill, and deepe insight in their Facultie, by the sole and bare Inspection of the stinking Paspot, like an old Hag, or Sorceresse, shewing great wonders in her Christall Glasse, neuer once seeing the Patient, nor pondering with Iudiciall consideration, the Indications Curative, doe vnseasonably and Idly discourse of the Nature, Causes, and Cure of Diseases, before silly Chare-women, and simple Boyes and Gyrls, that in whole troupes flocke to their Houses, with a Glasse Pisse-pot in their Hands: confidently swouching, or rather manifestly and shamelesly Lying, contrarie to the Part and Office of an Ingenuous and honest Man, that they finde out and discern all these Things by gazing vpon the Putrified and strong-sented Vrine.

But these Men esteeme Gaine to be sweete, though it come by impudent Lying, and vn honest Couzening: whereby they send whole Multitudes of silly Soules, insnared in their Gins, vnto Pauers Kingdome.

Others most impudently, and falsely affirme, that all Diseases and Maladies how contrarie in Nature so euer, may indifferently, and easily be cured with one Medicine, or Panacea.

And that we need not so many Compositions, and Prescripts, as are now vsed: but that our Apothecaries may spare their Labours, shut vp their Shops, and seek out some new Occupation, since it is a matter of small Difficultie, to make one Cacolicke, (I should haue said Catholike) which may serue for all Turnes.

But since Experience hath neuer yet approoued, this phantasticall and senselesse Fiction, of some crazed and addle Braine, neither Any Man made Demonstration thereof by good and sound Reason: it remaineth that these Idle and bruised-headed fellowes, are notable Impostores, Quack-saluers, and Such as offer most dishonourable and intollerable violence to Physicke, and all her faire and beautifull Nymphes.

Yet the Poore and Silly Multitude admireth such, as Petite Chi-romant and Apelles, not knowing that these Magicall Arts, and cunning Sleights of Legerdemaine, and plaine Coney-catching, are growne into a great Mysterie and Occupation, and in a manner the onely Way to thrive: being indeed no better then plaine Thecuing, or Robbing of men by the high way.

He therefore that hath bene trained vp in Cunning, and nimble Shifts, and Confering, from his youth, and desireth to fill his bagge speedily, and withall to haue the ringing Name and Fame of a great and profound Physition, let him take Order to make his Medicines at home in a Corner, or Seller, or at least giue it out, that they are so prepared by Himselfe, though he secretly buy them abroad at the Apothecaries; or let him haue alwaies at Hand one, or at the most two or three Medicines (if one of them be a Charme it is no matter, but all the better, wherewith let him promise Boldly, confidently, and peremptorily, without blushing any more then a blacke Dogge, that he will Cure all Diseases whatsoever.

For by this meanes he shall be sure to vnder his Wares at a dearer and higher rate, then Reason or Honesty would require, and to make a good round Market when other stand still and coole theys Heeles.

And beside that, the Common people will flocke to such a One in whole Thraves, as vnto an Oracle of Apollo, hee shall gaine this thereby, that neither the Patient, nor his Friends, shal be able to know whether in stead of a Soueraigne Medicine, far set, and deare bought, they receiue rank poyson, or at best some vncouth, vnfitting, or counterfeite Dregge, or Drugge.

Neither neede hee to feare any sharpe Censure, of his superabounding Skill, and double Diligence, and least being in Consultation with other Learned Phisitions, he be compelled to bewray his Secret and barred Ignorance, if (as the fashion is of Men of his Cognizance and Coate, hee can set a good face on the matter, and Clamour aloud, that these are hidden and abstruse Secrets, not to be revealed to any, that they are nowhere to be had, eyther for Love or Gold, but at his House, or from his Apothecarie, and that no Man in the World knoweth how to turne his hand to the making of them, save Himselfe alone.

But it is one of the greatest Mischiefes and Miseries in the World, that such should professe themselves Artists and Phisitions, who know not how to performe any one Part or Office of a true & worthy Phisition.

For these are not the properties of any Ingenious, Liberal, and Salutiferous Science, or Qualities of a Learned, Sufficient, and Skilfull Artist or Professor, but rather euident Arguments, of a Perverse, Illiberall, and monstrous Disposition, thus like an Owle, or Night-Rauen, to flye, and shun the Light.

For it is appropriate onely to crooked, and ill-mannered Natures, and those that are altogether vnacquainted, with Humantie, and all good Letters, to traduce and calumniate, among the rude and simple Idiots, the actions and workes of Cunning, and Learned Artists, most skilfully and artificially accomplished: and withall magnifically to extoll, and commend, with bombasted, and transcendent Terms, their owne False, Sophisticate, and Adukerate Wares, and and to invent these Sathanicall Delusions, and in Inexpiable Crafts, and subtil Deuices, to insnare and abuse the Simple and Common Sort.

So that by these Courses they both deceiue themselves in the end, and deceiue, delude, and abuse others most Impiously, lowdly, and Nefariously.

We conclude therefore, and that as wee Suppose, vpon good and sufficient Ground, that Incomparable, and Diuine Hypocrites, did most truly, and wisely affirme, that there are many great Physicians, in Name and Estimation of Men: but in Truth and Substance, but very fewe, rightly deseruing that Reputation and Style.

And that they who are Complete and accomplished Physicians, are by the Verdit and Iudgement of all the Sages, and Wise Men, that either haue or do liue in the World, worthy of all Honour, Praise, and high Estimation.

And these alone, hauing passed thorow the Course of Learning, and giuen sufficient Testimony and Prooue of their sound Skil, Iudgement, and Experience, grounded vpon Reason, Art, and Sence, are able and fitted to exercise the Diuine Art of Physicke, to the Welfare and Health of Mankind.

And they alone doo happily atchieue these three maine Scopes, of Curing Speedily, without lingring Delayes, which are worse then a short dispatch of Death, Safely without hazarding, or running the Patients Life vpon those Rockes, wherevpon the Quack-saluer (as an unskilfull Pilot) doth for the most part most lamentably wracke them, pleasantly withour that to a sometimes and Tediuousnesse wherewith they are choaked by the counterfeit Mount-bankes and Slabstaker.

As for them who doo more eagerly affect and hunt after the Name of Physicians, then the substance and sufficiencie, esteeming it enough for their purpose, if they bee created Doctors at Dawes Colledge by the rule, and unskilfull Mulettie, and to be reputed, and passe Currant Physicians, and great Clarkes among them, who are indeed disguised and counterfeit Impostors, Iuglers, and Coniurers, they should bee rightly serued, and the Weale publique, Prudently and Religiously provided for, if they should bee interdicted to practise that Art which they neuer learned: or in imitation of Cato Censorinus, proscribed, banished, and expelled by whole Troupes out of those Cities and Provinces, where they haue settled, or at the least should bee punished for 20 The Anatomie of the true & fiftion, their vnbredled and intollerable Boldnesse, in Butchering, and Excarficating Mens Bodies, according to the Nature and Qualitie of their Offence.

That by this meanes they might be restrained and reduced into their proper Ranke, and Order, & not through Polypragmony, which is the Companion of Ignorance, Well-spring of Disorder and Confusion, and common Pest of Mankinde, busily intrude themselves, and thrust in their Sickle into other Mens Harvest.

So it would come to passe, that Honest, Good, and Learned Phi-sitions, should not vndergo a most Vniust, & Vnworthy Conditio: that is, in beholding daily Knaues, Couzening Shifters, and ranke Affes, preferred before them, or at least equally valued, esteemed, and respected: and that Gate and Gap would be shut and stopped, whereby these blind Buzzards, and bold Bayards, these butcherly Imposstores, doo freely enter to excruciat their poore Patients, and kill Men without controllment.

But a good Magistrate, to whom nothing is more deare & precious, then the safeguard both of the Goods, and Persons of his Subiects, is alwayes a Louer and Fauouer of Learning, and Liberall Arts, a Patron, and Mecenas of Learned Men, and therefore in his Wise-dome, vertuous Disposition, and watchfull Care for the Common Good, provideth by all meanes, that no Man be wronged or wracked in his Estate or Person, and preuenteth all Occasions, of such Schythi-call, or rather Sathanicall torturing and massacring of Men.

But he that Winketh, and looketh thorow the Fingers at these murders, and like a sleeping and drowsie Shepheard, letteth the Raunous Wolfe at his pleasure, pray vpon the poore Sheepe, cannot possibly be excused among the vertuous. For that euill and corrupt Custome, which hath euery where preuailed, redounding greatly to the ruine and Confusion of Mankinde, can by no meanes free the Magistrate from blame. Nay it rather argueth, and conuinceth both the Practiser, Consenter, and Conniver, at such horrible Crimes (for a small and base Bribe) to be worthy of the same Punishment.

But they who are altogether Illibrell, Vlettered, and Slaves to absurd, and erroneous Opinions, loathing, and persecuting with Vatinian hatred, all True and Learned Phisitions, nay Truth and Learning it selfe, haue this bred in the Bones, and rooted in the Flesh, through the Crooked perversitie of their Dispositions, and Rudisie of their Wits, to barke against Learned Men, and their wholesome Coun-sells, and honest Couises, and to be delighted with monstrous, and vncouth

vncometh Conceits, or rather Deceits, and with such sottish and foolish Quacksaluers; who are worthy to fall into the hands of these notorious Impostors, so well fitting their Humours, that according to the Old Saying, Like Lips may be serued with like Lettuce.

But these grand Seniors should do farre better if they imployed their swelling and high Conceit of deepe Wisdome in their owne Affaires, and containe themselves within their Shops and Ware-houses, and not arrogate to themselves, to Iudge of Matters whereof they are altogether ignorant, (it belonging to Artist to Iudge of Art) least they be compelled to heare against their Will, That the Shoemaker must not meddle beyond his Shooe.

Now (thou blinde Empericke, and vaine-vaunting Mountebanke, whosoever thou art) let me in Conclufion, intreat thee, to learne by this short Discourse, this short Lesson, To Know thy selfe, which though it be brieue, yet is it the Chiefe, and Choyse of all other Documents.

Dwell with thy Selfe, and breake not thy Ranke, but keepe within Compasse, and thou shalt easily perceiue thine owne Pouertie, Want, and Weaknesse.

I for my part, wish thee from my Heart, a more sound Head, and honest Heart, that thou mayest either fundamentally learne the Noble and Excellent Art of Physicke, and proceed in thy Cures by a certaine and right Lyne and Method, without foolish Superstition, or wicked Imposture, or else that thou wouldest honestly giue over that learned Profession, till Apollo haue more clearly enlightened thee, with his shyning and bright beames, least to thy indeleble Ignominy, Shame, and Reproach, some wise Man pronounce against thee this Sentence: That thou art either an Ass, a Foole, or a Cony-catcher.

Be Bold and Constant in well dooing: for when all is done, Victory will in the end, obtaine the Victorie.

A discovery of certaine Stratagems, whereby our English Emperickes haue bene obserued strongly to oppugne, and oft times to expugne their poore Patients Purfes.

IT cannot be sufficiently lamented, that the most auncient, worthy, and honourable Profession of Physicke, which hath bene in preceeding Ages, a Colledge of learned, graue, and profound Philosophers, is now become the Common Inne, Recepracle, and Sanctuarie of Make-shifts, Bankerrupts, and Impostors. This Honor Medicine apud Section prius. Tyme was, when that diuine, and excellent Science was had in high, and yet due Admiration, Honour, and Reputation. Salomon the most wise, rich, and renowned Prince that the world (from her Alpha to her Omega) hath yeelded, disdained not the Contemplation and Studie of this noble and diuine Art.
Nay which is more, did illustrate Physicke with his writings, and composed a great Volume of the Nature, of Byrds, Beasts, Trees, and Hearbes, describing them, from the Cedar in Libanus, to the Hyfsop that groweth on the wall.

This excellent and incomparable Worke, to the vnspeakeable griefe, and invaluable losse of all Aesculapians, is perished in the deepe Sea-gulfe of Antiquitie, which hath swallowed vp, deuou-red, and consumed the Monuments of many Worthies. Mithridates that puissant King of Pontus, who was for many yeares terrible to the World-conquering Romaines, amidst his Martiall and Kingly affaires, spent no small time in Physicall Meditations, erecting to himselfe by the Composition of one Medicine, as noble, durable, and admirable a Trophée, as Pompey the great did, by his Victory against him.

In this Kings Closet were found by that Noble Romaine, many Bookes written with his owne hand, both of the verrues of Plants, and Constitution of Mans Body, highly valued by that worthy Victor. Euax a King of Arabia, wrote a Booke of Botanologie, which hee dedicated to the Emperour Nero. It is reported by Historians, that in auncient Tymes there was no King, either of Egypt, E- thiopia,

The Anatomies of the true Physitian, thiopia, or Arabia, who did not himselfe either write somewhat concerning the Art of Physicke, or at least by his Kingly bountie, and large Pensions, encouraged others to imploy their Heads and Wits in that Studie.

Zenophon bringeth in Cyrus, conferring and discoursing with a Physitian, as a fit Colloquenter for a Prince, about the hidden Secrets and deepe Misteries of Nature.

Julius Caesar, that matchlesse and invincible Romane Emperour, made a Decree, that all Professors of Physicke should be free Denizens, and Burgeses of Rome. Democides the Physitian was in such credit and authoritie with Darius the Persian, that hee had a place assigned at his Table, and was as it were fellow-Commoner with him. Alexander having sent for Hippocrates, and being denied with grieve and anger, threatned a reuenge against all Greece.

Asclepiades reiected Mithridates Messengers, and refused all his liberall and Princely Offers. Erasistratus the Physitian, received for a reward at one Tyme, of King Ptolomee, (or as others write of Antigonus) an hundred Talents: which amounteth in our Money, to six-Phin. 21. li. 1. tin thousand Crownes.

Sextilius complained of the Princes of his Dayes, because his stipend for reading Physicke, was but five hundred thousand Cesterties. This is esteemed 4130. pound & two shillings, foure pence, whereas he gained more by his practise in the Citie. The like stipend was given by Claudius Caesar to this mans Brother. Trinus the Massilian left an hundred thousand Sesterties by Legacie, to build the walles of his Citie. I forbears to shewe their great fauour, credit, and authoritie with mighty Potentates and Princes, as Philip with Alexander, Adusa with Augustus. I omit the Aruncians, Alburnians, Rubrians, Lassians, and Carpentans, whose stipend in Rome was 205. Aureos. Thaddaeus the Florentine when he rode abroad, received ordinarily for his Fee, 500. Crownes a day: and for one Cure vpon Honorius the Pope, ten thousand Crownes at a clap. Cemianus the French Thucydides, telleth of a Physitian of Ludovic the 11. French King, who had from the King, admirable, and almost incredible Fees and rewards. To passe by these, with many other famous Presidents of Antiquitie, clearly demonstrating to the Worlds view, the true and due worth and esteeme, of this excellent Profession, to the shame and blush of our present Age, it maketh infinitely for the commendation of Physicke, that the Messias & Saviour of the world, he Emmanuel, God, it is the Lord Iesus himselfe in the daies of his sojourning, & walking here vpon the Earth, (refusing to intermeddle intermeddle with deciding of Controversies, & dividing of Lands and Goods, did notwithstanding spend a good part of his Tyme (after the performance of his Prophetickall office in teaching and curing the Soules of Men) in healing the Diseases and Maladyes of their Bodies: that is, in plaine termes, in exercising the Office & Function of the Physition. But here me thinks before I proceed further in this Argument, one ioggeth me on the elbow with this Item. A Sophister of Greece made a long Oration in praise of Hercules.

One standing by, before he could pronounce the whole, cut him off thus. Quis (quæso) unquam Herculem vituperavit? In like sort a man may demand of you, who haue begun a Panegyrick of Physicke. I pray you (Syr) who euer in his right wits dispraised Physicke? Well I could (if I were disposed) answer this Quære. But I will bee content for this Tyme to take it for graunted, that no Man of Common Sense, Wit, Reason, Iudgement, Discretion, Learning, or Humanitie, will etier open his Mouth in dispraise of a Profession so auncient, honourable, beneficiall, and necessarie vnto Mankind, (without which, neither Theologie can often preuaile to reforme the vicious Minde, vnlesse Medicine dispose the Body, and contemper the Humours: and Lawe should commaund in vaine, if Physicke did not yeeld apt and able Bodies to obey) I will drawe nearer to my present Purpose: wherevnto I hope this short Prælude in Physickes Praise, will proue nothing impertinent. For if Physicke be of that worth, honour and reputation (as hath bene in part touched, and might haue bene more amply declared, but that with the Dogge of Egypt, I am constrained to take a snatch and away) then, intollerable are the Indignities, and exceeding great are the Iniuries, which these base Cullions, and Buzzardly Venturers, (for so I chuse rather to terme them, with a Learned Man of our Colledge, then Emperickes) who leaping from theyr Shopboords, and leauing their Mechanicall Trades, haue, and doo daily offer to that faire, goodly, and galian Lady. A Fardell and Packe of the deceitfull Wares, and subtile Sophistications of these Circumferaneous Iuglers, hath already bene vntolded and laid open in the former Treatise, written in Latine by a learned Germaine. Now giue me leaue, to acquaint you with some such cunning Sleights, and pretie tricks of Legerdemaine, which I haue obserued to be put in vse and practise by our London Interlopers, and Quack-saluers, wherby diuers honest Men and Women, haue bene notoriously abused, deluded, emunged of their Money, and plainly coney-catched.

The cunning and slye Deuises, subtile Policies, and Warre-like Stratagems

Stratagems, whereby these valerous Thraſoes, and great Magnificendo lay a ſtraight ſiege, and make many ſtrong assaults vpon their Patients Purſes (for vnto the poore Purſe is all the Quarrell) haue partly reſpect vnto Themſelues, and partly vnto their Patient.

The firſt Proiect reſpecting Themſelues, whereby they ayme to winne credit with the Patient, and inſinuate themſelues into his fa-uour, bringing him into a Fooles-paradiſe, and cauſing him to haue their perſons in high admiration, is to blowe into his Eares, and that with a ſhameleſſe impudent face, and a tedious multitude of vaine, lying, and vaunting words, that they haue certaine hidden, deepe, and precious Secrets, altogether vknowne to the Galeniſts, and Schoole-Doctors, whereby they are able to worke wonders, and to quell Gargantua himſelfe. If the Patient demaund how they came by this profound knowledge, hauing neuer followed the courſe of Learning, or ſtudied in any Vniuerſitie: then they eyther begin with a ſolemne grace, and ſet countenance, a long Storie of a written Booke of moſt rare and admirable Medicines, inuented by a certaine profound, and deepe learned Fryar or Monke, and hidden with great care, in the Wall, or Sellar of a Monasterie: Which Booke by great Chaunce, and their happy Fortune, hauing come to their hands, they would not part with it for Saint Peters Cope, or a Kings Raunſome.
Or elſe you ſhall haue a Tale of Manardes the great Phyſition of Spaine, who keeping a ſecret Booke of moſt rare and excellent Ob-ſervations, your braue and vaunting Quack ſaluer, auouching himſelfe to haue bene his Man, will boldly (bluſhing as much as a blacke Dog) affirme vnto you, that beeing with him in his ſickneſſe, whereof he dyed, and obſeruing diligently the place, where Manardes laid vp his Iewel, they cunningly after his Death, ſeized on this Booke, and conueied it away with them. Hereby they are made of vnlettered Idiots, great and ſkilfull Æſculapians, and vndertake the Cure of all ſtrange, difficult, and deadly Maladyes. Or if the Patient miſſe of theſe Poeticall Fictions, he may well ſtumble vpon that good fellow, who (as it is ſaid) hath a long Diſcourſe of Seuerinus the Dane his ſonne, who being in ſeruiſe in the Spaniſh Armado, Anno. 88. was wracked and caſt on Shore. Herevpon, wandering as a poore harbourleſſe, and ſuccourleſſe Straunger, he arriued at the laſt at the houſe of our Iuppi-ter Hoſpitatis, who receiuing him into home and harbour, vſing him kindly, and at his departure furniſhing him with ſome ſupply of Pence, that thankfull Mercurie, in recompence of this great Hoſpitalitie and Humanitie, beſtowed vpon him his Caducean Rodde,

A Booke of rare Physicall Mysteries, whereby in an instant hee was from a silly Sot, not able to speake one word of congruous Latine, presently Metaphorphosed into a graue, demure, and grand Doctor, and Maister in Physicke. A hundred to one, if hee happen not on some one or other of these stale Icasts, or at the least, some other of the like Nature: Which notwithstanding, a great Number of our Common Ones doo as readily belecue, as if they should heare the Story of S. Francis out of Legenda Aurea. And here by the way, it is worth our obseruation, that those graund Maisters do vtterly renounce and disclaime Learning, and all Education in any Vniuersitie, wherein it is like they neuer came (vnlesse to set vp their horse in an Inne, whilest they breake their fast) flying to a written Booke, or some Medicines, receiued from a Friend by Tradition. And would a Man imagine that any should bee so voyd of common Sence, Reason, or Iudgement, as to thinke that a fewe scribled Receipts in an olde Moath-eaten paper should make a Physitian? Why then euery one that hath lying by him, a good Booke of Lawe, as Rastalls Statutes, or Littletons Tenures, is a Compleat Lawyer. And hee that hath two or three Bookes of Diuinitie in his House, is an absolute Diuine, and may step vp into the Pulpit. If this were so, we might well say with that merry Physitian, that he had raigned Doctors in all Faculties.

Their second Engine, or Plausible perswasive Motiue, whereby they labour to fasten the former Nayle, to winne Reputation of deepe Skill to themselves, and purchase credite to their Panaceas, and wonder-working Dregges, is a pretie figment, or forgery, not vnlike the first. After they haue laide the former ground, and perceiue the poore Patient to giue a listening Eare to their forged Fable, conceiuing hope of luckie successe, and by his nibbling at the baite, that hee is like to swallow the hooke, they proceede to Gull him thus. They begin, to make theyr former matter good, with incredible boldnesse and impudencie, to auene that theyr knowledge is so singular, theyr secret Medicaments so soueraigne, and of such admirable Efficacie, that diuers Learned and Professed Physitions, of great Note and Account, haue sought earnestly, Wooed, and Sollicited: nay offered good summes of money, to haue them imparted and communicated.

And because it is sinne to belye the Diuell, and some Men may thinke I wrong them with so deepe a charge, I assure you vpon my credit, I speake no more then I haue heard Hisc Auribus. One base Thick-skin (whose Story it may be you shall haue hereafter more at large) taking vpon him to cure an incurable Disease, and being willed by a Phisition, requested by the Patient to ioyne with him, to make knowne his Medicine. My Medicine (quoth hee) with great indignation, that I will not for any Mans pleasure. D. Dodcm, and D. Case of Oxford, haue offered me fortie pounds yearly during my life, if I would acquaint them with that secret. This was as true as that the Sea was on Fire, and this good fellow quenched it with a Bale of Flaxe. Neuerthelesse, by this and such like pretie sleights, he carried away the Patient for that Time, and got some Crownes: the other Phisition, because he refused to hold the Candle to so base and blinde a Companion, being reiectcd.

An other Medicastro, a ratling Gossip, (for such likewise haue learned their Leripoope, and haue as glib, smooth, & nimble Tongues as the best) hauing commended a Drench she had for an old Cough, vnto the Skyes, auerred boldly in the hearing of a Phisition, that her Medicine was of such vertue, and had done so great Acts, that D. Smyth and D. Turner, had taken her aside, and with many faire words, putting likewise some Angels into her fist, had intreated her, to impart to them her Secret. But (said she) with a grace I warrant you, Should I teach the Doctors? nay I will neuer do it. They would make 20. or 30. pound yearly of it, whereas I do good therewith, and take small recompence for my paines. The Phisition smiling, answered. I belecue you (good woman) that you will not teach the Doctors, I will be your warrant for that matter, you shall need no further Bond or Suretie. Was not this a goodly sweet Parrate trowe yee? Haue not the Doctors cause to lament that they shall want the instruction of such a Lamia?

A third, as bold and blinde an Empericke as London hath yeelded these many yeares, being by the Coll. committed to prison for his notorious fortifnesse, Impudency, and manifold Misdemeanours, (to giue them the least and lowest terme) gaue it out among his fellow prisoners, and such as selected vetrum, that his commitment was, because he refused to disclose vnto the Phisitions, his hidden secrets, whereby hee performed such Cures, as they were not able to turne their hands too. But suppose wee should graunt vnto these Braggadocian Thessali, that they had secret and good Medicines, yea such as diuers Phisitions desired to knowe; would it therefore follow that they they were fit Men to take vpon them the Profession, and Practise of Physicke: Nothing lesse. For Physicke is a great Lady or Princesse, hauing subiect vnto her, many large, goodly, and spacious Territories, Whereof the skill of inuenting, and making a Medicine, is one of the last, and least in Estimatiō. So that a Man may be somewhat acquainted in this Region, and yet altogether ignorant in the ample and rich Countries and Fields of Physicke.

Physicke is defined by Galen in his Arte Parua: The knowledge of things wholesome, vnwholsome, or neutrall. Or, the Science of Things Naturall, Preternaturall, and contrarie to Nature. Physiologie is the first Part of Physicke, chalengeth for her Patrimony, those seuen Things whereof our Nature consisteth: Elements, Temperaments, Humours, Spirits, Parts, Faculties, and Functions. Here is a large walke for our silly Emperickes, as vnouth, and vnknowne to them, as Terra, America, China, or Guiana, to our poore Plough men. Anatomy being but one Shyre, Prouince, or Countie, in this Precinct or Countie, discoursing vpon the Parts, whereof we consist, is of such Noblenesse, Amplitude, and Reputation, as that many worthy, and excellent Wits haue bene content here to take vp their Rest, and dwell therein their whole Time.

A number of our jolly Quack-saluers, are so ignorant of this Skill, that they know not whether Anatomy be a Man or Woman, an Horse, or a Cow. And yet it is as possible, for him to be a Phisitiō, that neuer knew or sawe Dissection, as for him to be a good Carpenter, that neuer sawe an House, or a good Mariner, that neuer set eye on a Ship, in his Life.

Hygie is the second part of Physicke, travelleth in preserving the health of those who haue obtained a sound Temperament, in their Similar parts, and right Proportion in the Instrumentall, by the moderate and well ordered vse of those sixe Things which we call Preternaturall. The knowledge of those Things, which we call Vnwholsome: or contrarie to Nature, if you respect the Theorie, is termed Pathologie, and sheweth at large of the Causes, Signes, and Nature of Diseases. If you regard the Praxis, it is termed Therapentice, who grapeth with Natures Enemy, and opposeth vnto all Maladies, apt, Artificiall; and Rationall Medicines, and that in three large Differences. The first is called the Dyer of the sicke: the second, Chyrurgery: the third, Pharmacencie. So that the Physition, as a great Commander, hath as subordinate to him, the Cookes for Dyer, the Surgeons for manuell Operation, the Apothecaries for confecting, and preparing Medicines. You see then, how goodly large, and ample Patrimony Physick hath; and that all her Store, and Skill, consisteth not in compounding and mingling of a Medicine. If that were all, the all our skilful Chirurgions, and Apothecaries (of whom we haue many in this Citie) should be absolute, and compleat Physitions, who I dare boldly affirme knowe moe and better Medicines, then the brauest, and Crakingest Mount-banke in the Land. And yet how farre the cunningest of them are, from being able to giue counsell in Physicke, both themselves will ingeniously and freely acknowledge, and all men of Iudgement, may easily discern. But who so bolde as blind Bayard, who seeing not the Danger, and Diche before him, rusheth on without feare, and plungeth himselfe ouer Head and Eares, ere hee be aware. Herophilus calleth Medicines Manus Deorum, being prescribed and accommodated by the learned Physition, but flat Poysons if they come therow the handes of vnlearned and venterous Quack-saluers. Nullus Morbus idem omnibus: No Disease is of the same Nature in all Constitutions. Nullum Remedium eundem tam habet in singulis. No Remedie hath the lyke Operation in every particular Patient. A good Remedie in the Head or Closet of an vnskilfull, and venterous Periclitator, is as a Sword in the handes of a mad-Man. Or as the blinde Mans staffe, which may so fall, as it may kill the Hare. So theyr misapplied and misshapen Remedies, may sometime quell the Disease, but by as great chaunce and misfortune, as that good Fellow had, who being drunke and on horsebacke, ridde in the night safely ouer a soote-bridge, crossing a broad and deepe River, it beeing a thousand pounce to a Nutshell, that both hee and his Horse should haue come short Home. Natura est Optatrix Morborum. Nature her selfe is the Curer of others Diseases; into whose harvest these intruding Copers mates do thrust theyr Sickles, reaping oft times her due Praise and Commendations.

To conclude this Poynt, (wherein I haue beene content to dwell the longer, because it is the strongest Castle and Hold, wherein our Maister Emperiekes doe most trust, and wherevnto they haue continuall Refuge and Retreat in all assaults). I dare boldly set downe this Maxime, and Theorem, and maintaine the same against all Commers, that Morbis curatur magis Methodo, quam Medicinis. Diseases are rather cured by a Rationall Methode grounded upon Arts Indications, then by force of any Remedie, though neuer so soveraigne. The Indications whereby Iudiciall and Rationall Physitions are guided and directed (as by Ariadnes thread) in the Curation of Diseases, are many, (and not to be stood vpon at this Tyme) all of them neglected, and vnknowne to the poore blinde Empenckes. And yet the Poet could say, speaking but of one of them.

Temporibus medicina valet data Tempore profunt, Sed data non apto Tempore Vna nocent.

But hauing (as I hope) sufficiently battered this Fort, and ferried these Coney-catching Companions from their Sanctuarie, or rather Fox-hole, I will proceed, or rather post vnto their third Topicall Place, or Latebra Sophistica, whereby they seeke to mount vpon the Banke of Fame, and raise vp Themselues in the Conceit of their simple Patients.

When they perceiue the Patient to haue swallowed the two former Flyes, then they begin to stand vpon theyr Typtoes, and with a composed Countenance, and Stagge-like gesture, to relate such strange, vncouth, lowde ringing, and Paradoxicall Narrations, as a man would suppose they were solemnly set to lye for the Whetstone. Ubi adhibet plus paulo sua mihi qua narrat Facinora. When they are set vpon theyr Ale-bench, (for it is worth noting by the way, that eyther at the Ale-house or Tauerne, where is their chiefe Hauor, theyr matches for Cures are vsually made) and are a little whited, it is wonderfull, what fabulous Tales and Stories, what vnfaurie and odious Leafings they will tell of theyr incredible, and admirable Curations, performed vpon most desperate, and deadly Sickneses, and such Persons as were altogether giuen o-uer and forsaken, as forloine and past helpe by the Physitions. There you shall heare of Dropsies, dead Palsies, (as they tearme them, olde and knottie Gouts, Apoplexies, great and growne Stones in the Bladder, a great rabble moe of Churlish and Sturdie Companions, all bowing the knee, vaying the Bonnet, and dooing lowe obeysance to our grand Seignior, Magnifico, Monsieur Mountebanke.

And least you should call in Question the credit of those good old Gentlemen, or doubt of the Truth of their Poeticall, Hyberbolicall, and extravagant Discourses, you shall haue them name the Cities and Townes, Parties, and Places where their great myraculous Workes and Wonders were acted and executed: Marry they will be sure not to name any Parties or Places too neare at hand (for that might peradventure marre all) the fooles are more wise then so. But if you would finde out the certaintie of these Matters, you may perhaps ryde your horse out of breath Some of them will haue for their Associate, an old Weather-beaten Broking Cōpaniō, somewhat known to the Patient, (as very a &c. as themselves) who shall play Quarbo part, soothing them vp in all their loud Leafings. His maner is, to scratch and clawe our Magnifico by the Elbow, and to tolle on the silly Patient, in this sort. (Syr) vpon my credit, this is an honest and simple-meaning Gentleman, if he say the word, you may be bold to build and write vpon it. He would not tell you an vntruth (I dare say and sweare too for a need) if he might gaine thereby an hundred pounds. Though he goe but plaine, yet his Repuration is good in the Towne and Countrey where he dwelleth. He is sought vnto farre and neare. He is acquainted with diuers Noble men, and great Personages, and hath access vnto them, and is admitted into Ladies Chambers, when your gay Doctors with their veluet Ierkins are shut out of Doores, to coole their heeles. He hath bene a Traueller in his Dayes, and hath thereby attained such deepe and profound skill in Physicke, and such rare and precious Medicines, that hee putteth downe all the Doctors where euer he commeth. Vpon my knowledge, he hath cured them, which had bene with all the Doctors in London, and spent great summes of money, without receiuing any good, till they met with him. I may say to you, he is the oddest Man in a Land. If he vndertake you, I will bee his warrant that hee will cure you. I neuer knew him yet to faile in any. He hath the Luckiest hand in a Countrey. I neuer knew any miscarrie vnder it. Doth not this slye, and subtil Pricker tell a smooth Tale, to couer and colour this pack of cloaked Knauery? And no maruell. For he speaketh and pleadeth for his Fee, and Shareth with his Maister Thraso Mounfier Magnifico, hauing sometimes a Proctors, sometimes a Councellors Paye for his labour. Thus these two Veterators, or Couzening Copslemars act their Parts, as it were on a Stage, circumfencing and insinuating simple Men and Women, altogether vnacquainted with these quaint Deuises, laughing them to come behinde their backes, ryding them for Asses, boating of their their slye and cunning conueyance of their matters, and each of them vaunting that he played his Part best. In this sort do they solace themselves with their sweete stolen Bread, and make merry with their Patients money. For you must vnderstand, that vsually it purchaseth neither House, Goods, nor Lands; but a fewe Pors of the best Ale or Wine in the Towne. And yet they receiue fine Crownes oft times for one of their Couzenages, (for Cures I will neuer call them) then diuers learned and honest Physitions, for two or three, iudicially, and happily performed Curations.

Having now coursarly passed ouer the first Kinde of the warre-like Engines, whereby being raised vpon the Mount of their owne Praise and Fame, these braue Pot-souldiers doe make a fierce and strong batterie vpon the silly Patients Purse: I will proceed to the second Ranke, of militarie Stratagems; and Warre-like Policies, by which they doe est-soones, foale the Walles, enter the Ramperts, and like valiant, and victorious Conquerors; possesse them of the Piece and Fort; holding out against their matchlesse Puissance.

As the former had respect vnto themselves, and their owne Fame and Reputation: So these last haue Reference and Relation wholly to their Patients Good.

First therefore (let the Disease be what it will or shall) (for if you will haue the Truth; for the most part they care not, nor know not) neuer so dangerous, deadly, desperate, incurable, they will promise most confidently and arrogantly, a perfect, absolute, & compleat Cure. All is fith with them that cometh to Ner. They make no bones at it. And yet the Poes could say thus much.

Non est in Medico semper relictur ut Ager.

Interdum docta plus valet Arce Malum.

Hippocrates the Father of Physicke, and Phoenix of the World, whose Writings are by venerable Antiquitie esteemed Oracles, and not words of Humane Tongue: who (as Macrobius saith) could neither deceiue, nor be deceiued, whose Humanitie and Benignitie was such, that hee knew nothing, but that hee would wee should likewise knowe, whose deepe reach, insight, and admirable Skill was so great, that no Man after him, knew any thing, whereof he was ignorant; this honorable Dictator of Physicke affirmeth often, that there are many Diseases incurable. This cometh to passe, partly because some diseases are hereditary a Semine Paterno, and being bred in the bone, as we say, will hardly bee rooted out of the flesh: partly by the Force and Violence of some Maladie and Symptoms, far surmounting Natures strength. And that appeareth eyther by the Nobilitie, and Necessitie of the Parte offended, or the Worthinesse and Excellence of the Action violated, or by the euill Nature, and secret Malignitie of the Affect. Herevpon it is that Hippocrates saith: Solueret fortem Apoplexiam impossibile, leuem hand facile. And that in regard of the Dignitie of the Part affected, the necessary vse and excellencie of the Actions of Sense and Motion, mightily oppugned, and the boysterous, and churlish Violence of that most terrible and deadly Disease.

Herevpon likewise that honourable old man, the Mirtour of Antiquitie, in the same Book of Aphorismes, which hath merited the highest Place among humane Writings. Aphor. 1. sayeth. O portet non solum Medicum suum officium facere, sed etiam Egrum, & Astantes, & externa esse rite comparata. The Physicion must not onely performe his office, but the sicke Man and his Ministers must do their Parts, and outward Things must be well disposed. This golden Sentence set in the Fore-front of that Diuine worke, giueth vs plainly to vnderstand, that all the Keyes of Curation hang not at the Physicions Gyrdle, it resteth not wholly and solely in him, to performe the Cure, but Rauenants and Nurses haue likewise their Offices and Charges to looke vnto, and externall Accidents may marre all the Market. Morbis suis Natura curabiles sepe Patientium & Clinicarum infortia, incuria, nobilitas, aut morositate incurabiles redduntur. This was the cause why Galen wiltheth Physicions neuer to meddle with those who are intemperate, and wholly addicted to satisfie theyr Appetite, and sensuall Delights: for (sayth he) neither shalt thou receiue credit, nor they any good or benefite by Physicke. A great Emperour bringing with him to a sicke Courtier, two of his Physicions, demanded of them what they iudged of the sicknesse, whether it were curable, or no? The first answered, that it was curable. The other that he iudged it incurable. I (sayeth the Emperour) what is the Reason of this Dissention and Difference betwixt you? No difference (my Lord) answered the later Physicion. Ille enim ad Rem sufficit, Ego ad hominem. He respected, in his answer, the Disease, and the Patient, whom I knowe to bee so violently and intemperate, that it is impossible to Cure him. How is not that truly and discreetly and reasonably said, that I say not pecuniary and peruerse many Patients are, it is too well knowne to Physicions, and Others likewise who are not too exceeding partiall, and therefore needlesse and tedious for me to stand vpon in. The manifold Errors and Misdemeanours of the friends of Patients, especially Women, Nurse-keepers, Sexuants, Cooke, Surgions, and Apothecaries, would fill a feuerall and great Volume. I will onely point at one vulgar and common Fault, greatly hindring the happy proceeding, and succeeding of our Cures in London. And that is the ficklenesse, and fugitiue Inconstancie of our Patients, who being perswaded by every prating Gossip that commeth in to see them, and filly Chare-woman that attendeth them, will haue for every Day they are sicke almost, a new and seuerall Physicion, and perhaps chaunge euery Day for the worse. Thus doo they deliriari and play the Wantons because of their ease and plentie of water at their Doores (I meane the varietie of good and skilfull Physitions) but chiefly by the fond and witlesse motions, of these buisie giddy-headed women; who are constant in nothing but Inconstancie, blowne too and fro with euery breath, like a Feather. Sometimes they will dispraise and debase the former Physicion, for no other reason; but because hee is knowne vnto them: and magnifie and commend a straunger because he is vnkowne, as a man of deepe learning and Iudgement. Otherwhile the Physicion is too young, and want-eth Experience: and then they will extoll to the Patient, a blinde Empericke, who hath neither Wit, Learning, nor Experience, and yet hee must be the Man. Sometime againe the Physicion is too old, and spent, his Memorie and Iudgement faileth him, hee is now done, you must take an other that is more fresh and readie in his Maters.

With these and the like, idle, trifeling and childish Follies they do often interturbe and hinder our Curations: and the Physitions are blamed, traduced, and disgraced, when the Patient himselfe, or his wife Counsellors deserued well, much rather to be whipped. Qui Plures consultat Medicoes in singulorum Errorum cadit, ipse falsus maxime. He that runneth after many Physitions, oft times deceiueth them all, and himselfe most & worst of all. That external Euents do interrupt the course of Curation, and dash all on the sudden, it is most euident. A Phy-sition in London had a Patient, who hauing bene sicke of a burning Feuer, and beeing in good way of recouerie, a Creditor of his (to whome hee owed a round summe, hearing of his Sicknesse, and daunger, pressed suddenly into the Chamber where hee lay, and expostulating with him, in many sharpe, and rigorous words and threats threats for security of his Debt, so disquieted, vexed, and overhauled the poore Man, that hee relapsed into a Phrensie and Idlenesse of Braine, crying out still vpon his Creditor, that he would lay him vp, that the Sergeants were at his backe, readie to seize vpon him: that he must lye by it, his Wife and Children should be vndone: and thus railing, within fewe dayes dyed. This Man might haue recovered in the Philosophers Iudgement, if this vnhappy Accident had not happened. Incomparable Galen, the store-house of all good learning, from whose reading, the best learned shall ever returne more learned, concurrith in this point, with his Maister Hippocrates, as hath bene already by the way touched, and might be by many places of his workes plainly proued, if it were not altogether superfluous, to spend Tyme, and blot Paper, in a matter so euident. Consider then, the intollerable & shamelesse Impudencie of our vaunting Pyrgopolynices, who wil take vpon him to set Hippocrates and Galen to Schoole, as simple & rude fellows in respect of his graund-Maister ship. And heerein that brain-sicke Germaine, that notorious Sophister, and Impostor of the World, Paracelsus, hath plainly discovered himselfe to be a mere Moultre-banks: (for if he had bene a learned Man, he would neuer haue done it) bawking euery where in his roning and raving Discourses (for Method or Art they haue none in them) at Galen, one of the Springs of Physicke, challenging himselfe for Ignorance, his Medicines for insufficiencie, and inuaiditie: all his Successors and Followers in the Physick Schooles and Vniuersities, for Dots, Dunses, and Ailles, in comparison of his goodly Selfe. Ebruius est non enim faceret hec sobrius Vnquam. The Wine was in, and the Wit was out, when hee did and spake this, or else vndoubtedly he would neuer haue done it. But to let him goe, into whose grosse, and palpable Absurdities, intollerable Insolencies, and incredible Sophistications, if a man should enter, he should find Powles work, as we say: it is more then manifest, both by the Authorities, and sound Reasons of these graue and learned Philosophers, to whom, these base Cōpanions are not worthy to hold the Candle, or to be Named the same yeate with them, that all Diseases are not Curable, and that therefore they are notorious, and not sufferable Impostors, who take vpon them, more then the greatest Masters of Art would euer arrogate to Themselues: and that which indeed is not in their power to performe. The like may be said of Cures, which was said of Martiall affaires. In rubus bellicia, Adistum virum, locorum opportunitas, Classis, Comectus, Auxilia, multum iuuant. Quia ipsa Rerum Domina Fortuna magnam partem suo sibi iuro vindicat, &c. So in Curations, the Skilfulnesse, and Carefulnesse of the Physition, the Discretion and Tractabilitie of the Patient, and diligence of the Keepers, and Attendants, the faithfullnesse of the Apothecaries, Surgions, and other Ministers, the removing of all externall Impediments, do greatly further and forward Curations: but above all, and when all is done, there is a great Commander who sitteth in Heauen, and chalenge th to himself by good right, the chiefe sway and stroke in all this Businesse.

In him are the issues of Life, and of Death, he hath created both Phy-sicke and the Physition. Quo sup, Diptamniul, Ranacea inuat. Except the Lord build the House, the builders, &c. Except the Lord watch the Citie, the Watch-men, &c. The Eternall who hath given vs these Soules and Bodies, (of whom it should seeme these iolly fellows, these boasting Thraoes do fildome, or neuer thinke) hath reserved to himselfe a soueraigne and ouerruling Power: whereby hee doth oft times crosse the Meanes, and frustrate the Hopes of the most skilfull and exquisite Artists, much more, of our bold Periclitators, who blindly, sottishly, and sencelessly, go to worke. This caused that Eter-nised old Man, whose Fame is like to last as long as the World lasteth, cry out, that there was Divinum quid in morbis, a certaine Misterie in Diseases, which neither he, nor any humane Wit could ever found.

Their next Topicall Place, or perswasive Insinuation, pretending the Patients good, is this, that as they vndertake without all peradventure, an absolute Cure, be the Disease neuer so stubborne or pernitious; so they likewise promise with no lesse Impudence and Vaniti-e, a short and speedie Cure. This is exceeding plausible to the poore Patient, bringing him a sleepe, and causing him to scratch where it itcheth not. He will (forsooth) leap over the hedge before he come at it: he will not stand thrumming of Caps, or picking straws all the yeare, but with great Celeritie & Dexteritie, dispatch that in a weeke, which the Rationall Physition, the Schoole-Doctor with his Cauter-ious Caveats, will be bungling and iumbling at a Moneth or two.
Yet the wise Man wilteeth vs to hasten slowly, and telkth vs that a soft fire maketh sweete Maile, that a Thing is done soone inough, if wel inough: that hastie Bitches bring forth blinde Whelpes; that rash Temeritie is the Daughter of Folly, and Mother of Repentance. Di-uers Diseases proceeding from Inanition and Exhaustion, require necessarily, a conuenient space of Tyme, that Natures losse and expence may be by degrees repaired, restored, and (as it were) feeded. Others are of a Churish, Stubborne, and Rebellion Disposition, and must be gently and softly handled, and by litle, and litle, in some length

of Tyne; tamed and educated. They are like a sleeping Dogge, which must not suddenly be awaked, least you do Irritare Crabronem duplicem malum, and bring an old house vpon your owne, (or at least) the Patients Head. Rome was not built in a Day, and no Matter of waight or moment, can be negotiated and managed in a moment or trice, vntill we will huddle, and flubber them vp in such sort, as we must doo, redoo, vndoo, and as good neuer a whit, as neuer the better.

Their last and surest Card, whereby as with a cunning & strong Engine, they breake open the Gates of the long-assailed Fort, making themselves Lords and Owners thereof, so as the poore Patient dooth yeeld himselfe as altogether vanquished and subdued, and not able, to hold out any longer, is this. They will solemnly proteste, that though their skill be singular, and supereminent, yet their Desire is rather to doo Good, then to heape vp Gold: (for if they had bene of that humour, they might have bene worth thousands, and rumbled themselves in siluer before this time) and therefore for the good liking they conceiue of the Patient, and his gentle and courteous Nature and behaviour, they will require nothing, vntill they haue performed, and perfected the Cure. Herevpon the Patient is so well appayed, that he thinketh he hath gotten the Popes holownesse by the Toe, & met with the plainest, kindest, honestest, and friendlyest Gentleman in the World. But you must know, that though our craftie Coplemate, and old beaten Veterator, gloze, and glauet thus, yet hee meaneth nothing lesse. For hauing by this meanes entered into worke with the Patient, after three, or foure Dayes; all which while, he will shewe himselfe double Diligent, and tell him many a fayre Tale, and loud Lofing, hee will (spying his opportunitie) breake with him thus:

(Syr) you discern (I hope) that I haue a speciall care of you, you see what continuall paines I take, beside the expence and laying out of my money out of my purse for your Medicines. I trust you will haue some consideration hereof, and allow me money for to pay the Apothecarie. The Patient (if he be of any good, or kinde Nature, being overcome with kindnesse) cannot but yeeld to this equall Motion, and vially without with his purse, and giue him foure or five Angols, to buy Pottery Ware, as they vsed to speake. This our broking Mountebanks recometh with a right good willy, saying to himselfe, that hee shall not now loose all, but that hee is reasonable well payde for five or sixe, or at most tenne shillings bestowed in Drugges

And for the most part, when they have gotten possession of this money, they have attained the end: and toppe of theyr drifts. For you must vnderstand, that the greatest part of them carry not out the process of theyr Cures. But hauing made foure or five such like Markets in severall places of the Towne, wherevnto they arrive, they betake themselves faire and roundly to their heeles, giving theyr Patients the bagge, and leaping them in the lurch, in the midst of their Foole-conceited Hopes.

And although I might say, Hic facient exempla fidem, for Examples of these notorious Couzenages doo abound, and are too plentiful in all Places, yet because I feare least I have tarried too long in this base Argument, and spent too much time in stirring this filthy Dung-hill, I will hasten to an ende, and exemplifie my Discourse with one onely Store.

That base, vlettered, and vnmannered Thicke-skin, (of whom mentio by the way was formerly made, B. of H. by the Thames side) comming to London, and noysing abroad by his Trumpettors, his singular and admirable Skill and Dexteritie in curing diuers dangerous, desperate, and in truth, incurable Diseases, was brought by some of his Brokers, to a graue and honest Citizen, afflicted with that Maladie, wherein the learned Physitions flye to Solui Cuten, Solui Cuten. This noble Swanne, this vaine and vaunting Clowne, bragging of sundrie great and wonderfull Cures by him performed vpon Gentlemen and others in the Countrey, whom he blushed not to name, knowing that the Parties being absent, he could not be controlled, professed to cure him absolutely (without cutting) and that in three weekes space. The Citizen though hee gaue too listening an eare to these goodly Tales of our crackling Monna-banks, and was somewhat tickled to heare of Health and Recovery, and that with such celeritie and expedition, yet hauing a tollerable and good conceit of a Physition, whom formerly he used, sent vnto him, desiring him to conferre with our deepe and profound Artiste, & to ioyne with him in the Curation. The Physition repaying to the Patients house, and entering Parlee with our Monsieur Magnifico, Signior Rusticus, requested him to know what Course he would take in the Cure. I (quoth he) will giue him no Physicke. How will you then (replyed the Physition) remove the Disease. It will do it (saith our Quack-saluer) by a certaine Gift giuen mee, and by a rare and precious secret Medicine which I vse.

No manell (answered the Physition) if your Medicine being no Physicke,

The Anatomies of the wide Phisition, be strange and rare indeed about all I ever heard. But will you declare and shewe your Medicine, that wee may discern and Iudge of the finesse and efficacie thereof to performe this great and strange effect. Nay by your leaue (said hee) you shall pardon me, the foole is wiser then for. If I would haue discovered my Secret, two great Doctors of Oxford would haue assured me an Annuitie of fortie pound yearly, during my life. I am sufficiently knowne I tell you (Syr) and that to no Babes, or base Persons, but to diuers of the greatest Noblemen in the Land: and am admitted to their Speech and Presence, when Velvet Coates daunce attendance without. The Phisition perceiving by this small Conference; Monsieur Mounte-banke to bee of the right stampe, taking the Patient aside, and shewing him the grosse Ignorance, and intollerable Arrogancie of the Sottish Ass, perswaded him in many words, to shake him off, if he respected his Life, Health, or Credit, as a meere Couzener and Impostor. But he (though etherwise of sufficient wisdom) was so muelgled, or rather bewitched with the great bragges, and sencelesse Tales of this braggadocian Quack-saluer, that he would admit of nothing founding to his Disgrace, or Disparagement: affirming that by dealing with him, he could receive no detriment, since hee required no money, vntill he had absolved and finished his Cure. The Phisition answered, that though hee made due goodly pretence to drawe him on, and himselfe into the Gales, yet it was his, that by one meanes or other hee would get into possession; some peece of money (for sure hee was, that was the whye and make hee aimed at) and then bidde him farewell. This proved afterwards a very shrewd and perillous Prediction. For within fewe Dayes, passing by the Citizens House, he called in, to see how the world went, and was by him satured thus. (Syr) I doubt you will proue a Prophet; my Cunning Man, the last Day, complaining that he layed out his money at the Apothecaries; to buy Simples to compound my Medicine, I thinking it no reason hee should bee at such charge for me, opened my Purse, and gave him foure Angels. But I haue wished them since twise in it againe. for I feare hee will make your words good; he hath cast me once or twise by his tamperings and Drugges, into the fit of an Ague, so that I was readie (but for shame) to haue seke for you. I belecue, when all is done, hee will shewe himselfe a Couzening Companion. The Phisition smiling, answered: Why then I perceiue your deepe Doctor will not lose all his labour. He hath now as much money as he will looke for at your hands, and you as much Good, as you must expect from his. Hee hath cleared three Angels at the least, (sheare gaines) for three or foure Visitation: which if you had giuen the most learned Phisition in the Citie, you would haue scratched your Elbow, and thought your selfe vndone. Yet he sayled in his first conceit, which notwithstanding is commonly their Rest. For not long after the shamelesse Companion faigned a necessary and vrgent occasion of going into the Countrey, and before he went down, desired to haue so much of those Commodities wherein his Patient dealt, as came to three Pound. The Citizen knowing that by his meanes he had got in the Citie of diuers honest Men through his Hyberbolicall Commendation, twentie Nobles at the least, was content to lay them aside for him. But when he expected his present payment, he chopped him thus. Syr, we agreed for your Cure for five pound. I haue receiued alreadie fortie shilling: now this three pound maketh vp the iust summe. Nay by your leave (said the Marchant) I looke for readie money for my Ware. You haue had on me alreadie foure Angels, and I am no whit better then I was, but rather in worse State. Performe your vndertaken Cure, and you shall be assured of your money without faile. If it be so (said hee) I must leaue it behinde me til I return or send you vp money: for I haue sent downe my money before me. But neither Man nor Mony returned in haste. This was an old-beaten Souldier, a good Proficient, well trained vp in this Schoole of Couzenage, and Coney-catching, hee had learned his lesson perfectly, and was able to runne it ouer vpon his fingers Ends. For if you compare his Story with our present Discourse, you shall see that he neither failed nor faltered in any one Point of his Portuse.

Thus I haue spent (as you see) some fewe successiue and Idle-vagant houres, in vnfoldiing and laying open the Packe and Fardle of these circumferanious Iuglers, and pedling Pettifoggers in Physicke, who by these Adulterate, and Sophisticate Wares, deceiue, abuse, pray, and feed vpon the ruder and simpler sort of People. Yea, and by your leave, sometimes ouerreach & circumuēt those, who think themselves iolly fellowes, and great wise Men, to the great blemish and disgrace of that ancient, worthy, and honourable Profession of Physick, discredit, obloquie, and contempt of learned and good Phisitions, and to the great damage and detriment of her Maiesties Subiects, both in their Bodies, and outward Estates. My hope is, that this Curforie, and Rapsodicall Discourse (for to haue ransacked every Corner and Creuise in this Budget, would require a longer Tractat, and may hereafter be performed if this (Labor) proue planfible and grateful, may do good to some, and hurt none, except the intruding and shifting Mount-banke, whose prosequution, and persequution, both I, and all the learned Gentlemen of our Colledge, haue in our Initiation and Inanguratio solemnly vowed, and protested. It being the very ground and Originall, of all those large and bountifull Immunities and Priviledges graunted first to our Societie, by that puissant Prince of famous memorie, Henry the eight, and afterward ratified and confirmed by his Peerlesse Daughter, Queene Elizabeth, the Mirrour of all Heroicall and Princely vertues, the Assertor and Protector of true Religion, the Maule of Antichrist, the Astonishment and Wonder of Christendome, and the whole World, that we should, Videre & prospicere, ne quid in Rebus Med. Resp. Detrimenti caperet. That is, that we should foresee and take order, that the Common-wealth be not wronged in Matters appertaining to Physicke. It is therefore an odious Calumnie, and slanderous vntruth, which these base and out-cast Companions giue out, when they are punished by the Colledge, for their grosse Sottishnesse, shamelesse Intrusion, and vsufferable, and pernicious Offences and Disorders, that they are therefore onely pursued by vs, because they take away our profit, (when as in truth, they est-soones make worke for vs) and doo more good, then the Colledge of Phisitions: whereas the great Acts they do, may appeare partly by this present Discourse, and yet more evidently by those lamentable Accidents, and miserable Ends of many poore soules in London in a yeare, falling into these Hucsters, or rather Hacksters hands. Our Consciences toward God, our Dutie toward our Prince, our Loue to our Countrey, the honour of our Profession, the Oath we haue taken in our Admission, do all binde vs, as by a double or triple cord or band, Ad persequendum indoctos Empericos, & Impostoros. To pursue vnlearned Emperickes, and Impostors.

In conclusion therefore, I desire them who haue occasion to vse Physicke, to remember alwayes his saying, who affirmeth, that Potius mali a medico quam a Morbo imminet, si aut audacia, aut Imperitia Patret. There is more Danger to bee feared from the Phisition, then from the Disease; if he offend either in blockish Ignorance, or rash Temeritie; and thinke it safe for them, to be of the same minde with a great Learned Clarke in our Land, who in a dangerous sicknesse, being moued by some friends to vse an vlettered Empericke. Nay (quoth he) I haue liued all my Life by the Booke, and I will now (God-willing) likewise dye by the Booke. And so I wish from my heart to euery one of them, in Tyme of Health, a sound, faithfull, and constant and the counterfeit.

constant friend, who is called Medicamentum vita, and that they may avoyd the Silken and Oylie Tongues of the flattering Syco-phant, and in Time of Sicknesse, an honest and learned Phy-sition: and that they may not fall into the butcherly hands of the merellesse Carnifex (I would but (because it is out, and not amisse, let it goe) have said)

Quack-saluer.

FINIS.

Divers fault; have escaped the Printer; which as they are easily discerned, so I entreat thee (friendly Reader) to amend with thy Pen, as thou goest along: and to pardon me, who by occasion of some Businesse, have not looked so narrowly to them, as I should, and (otherwise) would have done.
